MR. BEECHER ON THE WEST AND SOUTH.

Shortly after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the Pennsylvania Railroad Depot, Jersey City, a stoutly built, elderly man wearing a black duster and a dark colored tourist's helmet, from beneath which a few scanty gray locks escaped, stepped from the platform of an incoming train. As soon as he alighted a gray-haired, smooth-faced, smiling little gentleman ran up to him, and entirely unmindful of the crowd of spectators imprinted a brotherly kiss on his lips. The person thus affectionately greeted was Henry Ward Beecher, and his friend, whose feelings were too warm to be expressed by an ordinary shake of the hand, was John T. Howard, the oldest member of Mr. Beecher's church. Mr. Beecher was accompanied by his wife. Among other friends who had come to meet him were Horatio C. King, J. W. Richardson, A. Whitney, and H. W. B. Howard. Mr. Beecher had just returned from an extensive lecturing tour in the North, West and South, and had been absent from home since July 9, having travelled in the interval 18,500 miles. He appeared to be in robust health. "I am too tired now to talk much," said Mr. Beecher when he had taken his seat in the ferryboat, "but I'll do all the talking you want next week. What has impressed me most during my tour, is the enormous extent of territory in this country. No man can by description gain any conception of the amount of livable land there is in the West, Southwest and Northwest. I am thoroughly in love with the Northwest."

"I was everywhere well received," replied Mr. Beecher to an inquiry. "In the South the most cordial feeling was shown me, with only few exceptions. In Montgomery, Ala., an editor resuscitated from his scrap-book several unsavory newspaper clippings about me, but his townsmen were ashamed of him and he took in his horns next day. Sectional feeling seems to have almost entirely died out there excepting among that class of elderly people who were slaveholders before the war and lost their property in the war. With them there is stil MR. BEECHER ON THE WEST AND SOUTH.

Then sectionalism in the South will be a thing of the past."

Referring to his visit to San Francisco Mr.
Beecher said: "I think the people there are begin-ning to feel that they have taken wrong ground on the Chinese question. Agitation against them now rests mainly on a political basis. The Chinese still in San Francisco appear well satisfied with the ex-clusion of their brethren as they are thereby en-abled to charge higher prices."

FUNERAL OF AUGUSTUS FUNK. FUNERAL OF AUGUSTUS FUNK.

The funeral of General Augustus Funk, formerly the proprietor of Irving Hall, took place at St. Stephen's Roman Catholic Church in East Twenty-eighth street, yesterday. The services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. McGlynn. The burial was at Greenwood Cemetery. General Funk was at one time in command of the Second Brigade, First Division, in the State Militia. In 1877, during a parade, Col. Vilmar, of the 11th Regiment, and his entire command, refused to obey his orders. Thereupon Gen. Funk arrested both the colonel and his men and confined them in Ludlow Bireet Jail. He was afterward compelled to resign his commission.
